

LUTHER S. LIVINGSTON.

Luther Samuel Livingston died in Cambridge, December 24, 1914. He was born in Grand Rapids, Mich., on July 7, 1864, and very early in life became interested in the book-trade. In 1887 he was engaged by Dodd, Mead & Co., and except for certain intervals spent in botanical research, was connected with that firm until 1910, when Robert H. Dodd joined with him in separate partnership under the firm name of Dodd & Livingston. In 1914 he was appointed Librarian of the Widener collection in the Harvard College Library. His unfortunate death, after an illness extending over two years, came within four weeks after the time of his appointment. In 1898 he married Flora V. Milner, who survived him.

Mr. Livingston was one of the leading bibliographical authorities in the country and was a frequent contributor on literary subjects to "The Nation" and other periodicals. He compiled the series of "American Book Prices Current" from 1895 to 1914, and the four volume "Auction Prices of Books" in 1905. Among his numerous other publications were the "Bibliography of Charles and Mary Lamb," and "Franklin and his Press at Passy," which latter volume appeared only a few days before his death. Mr. Livingston was elected a member of this Society in October, 1914, in recognition of which he presented to the Library a number of valuable works relating to Spanish America. His death was a great loss to this Society as well as to the book-world in general.
