

he published a "Life of Alexander Hamilton," in 1883 a "Life of Daniel Webster," in 1889 the "Life of George Washington," all of the "American Statesman Series." In 1885 he edited the "Works of Alexander Hamilton," in 9 volumes; in 1891 he published the "History of Boston" in the series of "Historic Towns"; in 1892 Historical and Political Essays; in 1895, with Theodore Roosevelt, "Hero Tales from American History"; in 1898 Story of the American Revolution; in 1899 Story of the Spanish War.

He was a devoted, useful and honest historian and ranked among the foremost authorities on American history that Massachusetts has produced.

Mr. Lodge had been an overseer of Harvard since 1884, was regent of the Smithsonian Institution and had been president of the Massachusetts Historical Society since 1915 and was a member of many historical and scientific organizations. He was elected to the American Antiquarian Society in October, 1881. At the centennial anniversary of this Society, October, 1912, circumstances prevented his delivering the expected address upon "International Arbitration"; he read, however, reminiscences of experiences abroad.

He was married June 29, 1871, to Anna Cabot Mills, a daughter of Rear Admiral Charles H. Davis, U. S. N., and had three children: George Cabot Lodge, Constance D. Lodge, wife of Augustus Peabody Gardner, and John Ellerton Lodge.

CHARLES PELHAM GREENOUGH

Charles Pelham Greenough was born July 29, 1844 at Cambridge, the son of William W. and Catherine Scolley (Curtis) Greenough, and died November 21, 1924 at Brookline, where he had made his home for many years. He received the degree of A. B. at Harvard in 1864 and in the following August became Captain's clerk on the U. S. S. Vanderbilt, one of the blockading squadron, but was obliged to resign in the following December on account of ailing health. In 1867, after extended foreign travel, he entered the Harvard Law School where he received the degree of LL.B. in 1869, and was admitted to the Suffolk Bar January 1, 1870. He associated himself in practice with Robert M. Morse with whom, and with the firm of Morse, Stone and Greenough, he continued until 1879 when, after another period of foreign travel, he opened a law office by himself and attained a high rank in his profession. He edited the ninth edition of Story "On Agency" and, as counsel of the Boston Gas Light Company, published a Digest of Reported Decisions in the United States on the Liabilities of Gas Companies and a number of pamphlets on Water Gas.

He was for several years Treasurer and, later, President of the Boston Bar Association and was active in founding the Boston Legal Aid Society. His interest in historical subjects took form in the collection and preservation of rare autographs and documents in which, beginning as he did before the extraordinary rise in values for historical materials placed them beyond the reach of any but the very wealthy, he succeeded in amassing a collection surpassed by few in New England for number and importance. He was a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society, the New England Historic-Genealogical Society, the Bunker Hill Monument Association, trustee of the Boston Athenaeum and was elected to this Society in April, 1891. His wife and four children survive him.
