AND MORE ADDENDA TO BELKNAP'S Oregon Imprints

This is the fourth cumulation of addenda to my Oregon Imprints 1845–1870 (Eugene, Ore.: University of Oregon Books, 1968).¹ The earlier cumulations were concerned largely with new information about titles described in the book and with problems of regional imprint bibliography that emerged through closer study of the Oregon record. Very few new titles were added to that record, and these appeared principally as illustrations in methodological discussions. In the meantime, however, more unrecorded pieces of early Oregon printing have turned up, together with evidence for the printing of more imprints that have been lost. The present article reports these additions to the basic bibliography.

A. Oregon Imprints Found. Many searchers, over a period of many years, combed collections of Western Americana throughout the nation and contributed to the record first assembled in Douglas C. McMurtrie's Oregon Imprints 1847– 1870 (Eugene, Ore.: University of Oregon Press, 1950) and extended in my book—which probably leaves few imprints of major importance undescribed. My book has, nevertheless, stimulated renewed searching by librarians and renewed interest by booksellers and bibliophiles in Oregon imprints. As one might have predicted, the unrecorded titles that have been called to my attention or that I have found by following my own hunches are mostly ephemera—if the term may be applied, not pejoratively, to pieces of workaday printing that illuminate casually but significantly the social, economic, and political history of mid-nineteenth-century Oregon, as well as its printing history.

All ephemera here described would, I trust, have been described in Oregon Imprints if copies or facsimiles had been located before its publication, though criteria there stated (pp. 7-8) opened the door for varying subjective judgments concerning 'items of special historical interest.' But the necessity to decide what to include in reporting a group of imprints that are predominantly ephemera raises questions that were not so insistent in the assembly of the basic bibliography, and incidentally underlines one unstated rule that helped ease decision problems in Oregon Imprints. This rule, theoretically unsupportable, perhaps, but practically convenient, is the exclusion of pieces for which no approximate year of printing can be readily proposed for placement in a chronologically arranged bibliography. Obviously, such a rule is discriminatory; any respectable pamphlet should be tracked down and assigned at least tentatively to some year, however questionable. Extensive research might suggest dates for some floating ephemera. But life is short.

Dates and judgments of historical interest are, however, not the only problems relating to ephemera that arise, especially when intensive search for Oregon imprints is extended beyond major collections of printed Pacific Northwest Americana, which usually reflect some discrimination by donors or librarians. Tucked away in manuscript collections and among mementos in local historical museums are authentic, dated, and unquestionably interesting imprints that represent types that may be problems only by virtue of their abundance. At the moment, looking ahead, I am bothered about funeral notices and wedding announcements. Several such pieces are here recorded and present no problem. But there are rumors that many more exist; if so, they may require recourse to short-form recording, an innovation introduced in Oregon Imprints for court briefs, legislative bills, and army orders, which also involve an embarrassment of abundance.

Twenty-nine titles dated 1869–70 come from a hoard preserved on leaves of a dismembered scrapbook of George H. Himes, a major Oregon printer in the late 1860s, that were found among uncatalogued materials in the Oregon Historical Society (OrHi); eight have a Himes imprint. The provenance suggests that most of the nineteen pieces in the collection that have no imprints were probably printed by Himes; but the presence of at least two examples of the work of competitors has persuaded me not to hazard printer identification.

Large numbers of receipt forms printed in Oregon through 1870 have been found in recent trial explorations of the Lane County Archives (OrECoAr) and manuscript collections of the University of Oregon (OrU). Many show printed evidence for the year of printing and some identify the printer. Several, through printed legends and filled-in blanks, supplement or correct published information concerning newspapers in whose offices the forms were produced. Two examples were described and discussed in my 1975 Pacific Northwest Quarterly article cited above. With restraint, I include here only three more from the 1860s (all in OrU), which contribute actually, not just potentially, to newspaper history (nos. 653b, 704b, 997a). No. 4d qualifies for a different reason—a decision in Oregon Imprints to record pre-1850 printing exhaustively.

Form. 15 x 4.3 cm. (dimensions of facsim. type column). Facsim. in History of the Pacific Northwest (Portland, 1889), II, facing p. 54.

In 1848 Archibald McKinlay was manager of the Hudson's Bay Co. store in Oregon City. The copy reproduced is dated Dec. 14, 1848, and has a serial No. 524. The form, except for 'No.' and '$', was printed with the Catholic mission French type with which George L. Curry began printing the Oregon Free Press in Apr. 1848 (see no. 13). For 'No.' Curry used one of his lightface American fonts. His American types apparently included no display boldface to replace or supplement the boldface acquired with the French type; and the French type, light and bold, lacked a dollar sign. Medare C. Foisy, when he printed a warrant form for the Oregon provisional government with the mission type in 1845 (no. 2), extemporized by using a bold capital S, with its exaggerated and inappropriate serifs whittled off, to provide the missing character; on the recorded copy of no. 2, the needed vertical slashes were added by pen. Curry, faced with the same problem, may have whittled a dollar sign from wood, as he whittled lowercase ws to remedy the shortage of this letter in his French body type; or he may have followed Foisy's example by modifying a bold figure 8, in which case vertical slashes were added by pen. The fascimile is not clear enough for a certain judgment. In either case, he forgot that the extemporized piece of type should be the mirror image of the needed impression, and his printed dollar sign is reversed. (Foisy's problem and its solution are addenda to the description of no. 2 in Oregon Imprints, where I failed to record 'S-- in the upper left-hand corner, though it is present in the facsimile of no. 2 following p. 46.)

No. 12aa is the only known piece of job printing with Curry's equipment until the spring and summer of 1849, after the Free Press had ceased publication, when Curry printed several documents for Gov. Joseph Lane (see no. 16). No copy of the original form has been located.

OREGON (provisional government). Superintendent of Indian Affairs.

To the Immigrants of 1848. | . . . | H. A. G. Lee, | Superintendent of Indian Affairs, Oregon | Territory, and Col. 1st Reg. Or. Riflemen, | Oregon City, April 14th, 1848. | [Oregon City: Oregon Printing Association.]

Broadsheet, printed on both sides. 20 x 55.8 cm. Text on recto in 2 columns. On verso, text in 3 columns, under caption: Way Bill, | From Fort Hall to Willamette Valley. | [thick-thin rule] Signed at end: Jesse Applegate.

Applegate's 'way bill' was also printed from the same type in the Apr. 8 Oregon Spectator. It provides detailed information, including mileage tables, concerning the southern route, which Applegate had explored in 1846. Governor Abernethy had warned the 1847 immigrants against the southern route in a circular (no. 8), which was reprinted in the Spectator, Jan. 20, 1848. But the outbreak of the Cayuse War called for second thoughts, especially because it was impossible to guarantee protection of the northern route (the 'old road') by federal troops or Oregon volunteers. Lee is cautiously neutral about the two routes; but, since his statement provides an introduction to Applegate's way bill and warns of the new Cayuse hazard, it might be taken as a recommendation of the southern route in 1848, apparently with no major Indian difficulties; an equal number took the southern route, bound for either Oregon or California. Form. 21.5 x 31.3 cm.

James Athey purchased Lot Nos. 1 and 2 in Block No. 4 on Sept. 16, 1850. The transaction was in anticipation of a county-seat land grant; see no. 34a, below. OrU. THORNTON, J. QUINN.

A |Legal Opinion | upon a part of the |Oregon Land Bill, |by |J. Quinn Thornton, Esq., | Counselor at Law. | [double rule] | Oregon City, | Printed at the Spectator Office. | 1850. [32a]

19 p. 12.5 x 20.3 cm. Wrapper title.

Thornton's opinion, dated Oregon City, Dec. 25, 1850, on p. 19, concerned the intent of the phrases 'every settler or occupant' and 'resided and cultivated' in sec. 4 of the Oregon Donation Land Act (see no. 33). He argued, with massive citations of legal precedents, for a liberal construction of these phrases. Although he admitted (p. 13) that he alone among Oregon lawyers supported this construction, his views won some support in later court decisions.

The pamphlet, with its 1850 imprint, presents a puzzling problem. On Jan. 2, 1851, the Oregon Spectator stated that it was 'rather startled' to hear of Thornton's views and added that 'We have also been informed that Judge Thornton has been requested to prepare his opinion for publication.' On Jan. 16 it published the full text of the opinion in $9\frac{1}{2}$ columns—in the guise of a letter to the editor from Thornton. On Feb. 20 and Mar. 20 it also published hostile letters from readers. In all this publicity, the pamphlet edition, printed in the Spectator Office but not from the newspaper type, is nowhere mentioned. The printing in the Spectator is, however, clearly a reprint of the printed pamphlet. For no reason except to prevent the pamphlet from running over 20 pages, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ pages are printed in small type. The Spectator, with no comparable space problem, drops the same text to the same small type size.

The pamphlet was probably a piece of Spectator Office job printing, ordered by Thornton in hope of attracting clients who would be hurt by a strict construction of the Land Act. If it was printed before the Jan. 2 Spectator was published, this would not be the first time that the Spectator editor was unaware of what was going on in the back shop (see no. 8).

The text of the Land Act reached Oregon early in Dec. 1850, and all 1850 Oregon printings omit the word 'white' from the phrase 'every white settler or occupant' in sec. 4. See Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, LXIV (1970), 223-224; LXVI (1972), 201. Thornton, who must have taken his repeated quotation of the phrase from one or another of these printings, also omits 'white.'

No mention of Thornton's opinion has been found in Dec. 1850 or Jan. 1851 issues of the Milwaukie Western Star; issues of the Oregonian for this period are missing from available files.

An act of May 26, 1824, granted to counties of the states and territories preemption rights to quarter sections of public land (if available) to finance the erection of public buildings. The Legislative Assembly of Oregon Territory did not formally authorize the location and filing of county-seat claims under this act until 1853 (1854 Statutes, p. 512). See also no. 22b, above.

In fact, though not by explicit designation, an extra. Contains a mixture of material reprinted from the regular Feb. 11 issue and preprinted material which appeared also in the Feb. 18 issue. Published for distribution on the Peytonia, which left Portland for San Francisco on Feb. 15. The innovation may have been intended in part to annoy one captive reader, Asahel Bush, the Oregonian's bitter journalistic rival, who had been in Portland for several days awaiting passage for New York with the manuscript of the 1854 Statutes (no. 101). Items in the Feb. 18 issue show that the Oregonian had advance knowledge that Bush would be aboard. OrHi.

On Nov. 11, 1854, a committee of a Temperance convention addressed a letter to the Whig and Democratic candidates for election to the territorial Council from Washington County, requesting their position on a 'stringent prohibitory liquor law.' The letter and the equivocal replies of the two candidates were published by the committee on a broadside (no. 135). On no. 137a, below the second thin-thick-thin rule, the committee letter is reprinted, followed by a reply from the fictitious candidate, Richard Swiveller, Esq.: 'Should I be elected, I shall go for that law in toto—at the same time I shall go for another law, which is a similar law, but does not imply the same meaning—that is to say that the one assimilates to the other, but they are entirely incompatable [sic]...I am in hopes that my reply may be proved as clear as mud to your collective intellects.' Several stock cuts, substituted for words in the text, are obscure rebuses; 'Z.K.R.Z.' means 'Seekers.' The satire is splendid, but its specific intent is also obscure. Perhaps it reflects an exasperated plague on all your houses—drys, wets, and politicians of all shades.

Broadside. 19 x 28 cm.

Above recorded lines: '[Fist] Please get all the names you can to the following petition, and forward it to Gov. Curry, as early as possible.'

Asahel Bush and other leaders of the Salem Clique were annoyed by Curry's hasty Oct.

15, 1855, proclamation calling for mounted volunteers to fight Indians in southern Oregon (no. 150), and even more annoyed when they learned that the companies. authorized to elect their officers, had chosen a number of Whigs and Know Nothings. Bush denounced these selections in the Nov. 3 Oregon Statesman and, according to the Nov. 24 Oregonian, 'within the folds of the same paper he sent to his democratic subscribers a printed petition.' The Whig press was outraged by such political interference with military operations; the Oregon Argus called it 'the climax of villainy.' See Bancroft, II, 385; W. C. Woodward, The Rise and Early History of Political Parties in Oregon (Portland, 1913), pp. 81-83, where the petition is quoted. See also Oregonian, Nov. 10 and 17, 1855; and May 8, 1858: 'Everyone knows that . . . Mr. Bush printed and circulated a secret circular.' Or-Ar. OrU (photostat).

[4] p., printed on first page only. 10.8 x 16.7 cm. Scalloped edges; embossed border. On the recorded copy, 'Democratic' has been scratched out by pen and 'Christmas' written above; 'Court-House' has been scratched out and 'Eugene City Hotel' written above.

According to Flora Belle Ludington, 'The Newspapers of Oregon, 1846-1870,' Oregon Historical Quarterly, XXVI (1925), 238, Eugene's first newspaper, the News, a Democratic campaign sheet, was established in Mar. 1856 and ceased publication in Nov. 1856 after the territorial election. These dates appear to be assumptions, however, since no issues of the paper have been located. It may have continued publication long enough to provide printing facilities for no. 228a or its equipment may have been still available in Eugene for a short time after the paper folded. If not, the piece was perhaps printed in the Statesman Office in Salem.

OREGON (territory). Governor (George L. Curry).

Correspondence |... | [Council, Dec. 19.—500 copies ordered printed for circulation among the people.] | [rule] | Salem, Oregon: | Asahel Bush, Territorial Printer. | 1856. [235a]

68 p. 15 x 21.5 cm. 'Council . . . people.' printed in brackets.

When Oregon public documents were printed from the same type under separate orders from the two houses of the Legislative Assembly and the two printings are distinguished only by title-page print-order legends, it is reasonable to transcribe one of the two title pages and note the other as a variant. No. 151 (the House printing of Correspondence) and no. 235*a*, however, represent a special case. Bush apparently did the ordered printing during the Christmas recess of the Assembly, starting with the larger House order, which was completed before the end of the 1855 calendar year; the title page properly carried the imprint year 1855. But the new year had arrived or was about to arrive when the time came to change the title page for the Council printing, and Bush changed not only the print-order legend but also the imprint year, to 1856. In a bibliography arranged by year of printing, the Council issue seems to call for a separate entry.

Though the Council received the documents on Dec. 18, 1855 (Journal, Seventh Session, p. 20), no order to print has been found in the Journal. But it is improbable that Bush invented the order; an oversight in the printed Journal is more probable. NN.

William Jones Gale was one of the Gale brothers of Eugene, several of whom were involved in the 1860s in the writing and printing of broadside verse, in some cases at least from the type of newspaper printings (see no. 634aa, below). Cummins, who was a friend of the Gale brothers, may have originated the broadside idea. The issue of the People's Press containing Cummins's verse has hot been found. OrU.

Broadside. 7 x 13.5 cm.

Call for recruitment of a company of volunteer cavalry, in response to a Sept. 12 requisition by Col. George Wright, U. S. Army, commander of the District of Oregon. The Governor appointed A. P. Dennison recruiting officer, who chose five citizens to assist him. The effort failed, and on Oct. 23 Wright, now commanding officer of the Department of the Pacific, requested Whiteaker to suspend the enrollment and began the direct recruitment of a cavalry regiment. An item in the Oct. 21 Oregon Statesman indicates one source of difficulty: 'On the assumption that Whiteaker, Dennison, and most of his subordinates, are secessionists, and likely to enlist only that kind of men, Mr. Geo. B. Currey, of Wasco county, has issued posters [no. 621] announcing another company to be formed, we believe in expectation of their being mustered in first and receiving the arms and horses left at the Dalles.' Currey succeeded in enlisting a company in Wasco County, which was incorporated in the regiment raised under direct Federal auspices. See House Journal, Second Session, Appendix, pp. 21-25, for documents bearing on this episode, including on pp. 22-23 a reprint of Whiteaker's proclamation.

Broadside. 9 x 12 cm. Decorative border.

Twenty-eight lines of verse. Also printed, from the same type but without the border, in the State Republican, July 12, 1862. J. M. Gale was editor of the paper from Apr. 21 to July 12.

This is one of eight verse broadsides in an album in the Lane County Pioneer Museum; all are imprints of the 1860s. The album is inscribed on the inside front cover: 'Phebe Gale Eugene City 1865.' It was later owned by Phebe's sister, Martha Jane Hockersmith, who in her old age, probably shortly before her death in 1903, added annotations on margins and insert slips. Two of the broadsides (nos. 634aa, 766a) carry the printed name of J. M. Gale (Joseph Marion), brother of Phebe, as author; and Mrs. Hockersmith states that four with pseudonyms (nos. 677b-e) are also the work of Marion. One (no. 677f) she attributes to J. N. Gale, another brother, and one (no. 801a) remains anonymous, though the style resembles Marion's verses. Only one of the broadsides (no. 766a) identifies its printer, H. H. Gale, a third brother. J.M., J.N., H.H., and a fourth brother, Thomas, were all at least occasional printers, associated with several Oregon newspapers during the 1860s. It seems probable that all of the J. M. Gale broadsides were printed by one or another of the brothers who happened to have type and a press at hand (the Gales were a closely knit family). All of J. M. Gale's verses are indifferent reflections on love, death, or both. He was a close friend of Henry Cummins (see no. 417a, above) and an acquaintance of Joaquin Miller. OrEPM. OrU (photostat).

Message of Governor Gibbs, Sept. 14, 1864 (House Journal, 1864, Appendix, p. 10): 'With the limited room in the penitentiary, and in the absence of machinery, all kinds of saddle-trees, cinches and apparahoes [sic], as well as clothing for convicts, are now made to advantage.' Gibbs had appointed Shaw warden in Nov. 1862 and Shaw immediately undertook the reform of the prison labor system, with special attention to the manufacture of saddle trees, for which there was a good market. The project was probably well under way during 1863, the conjectured date of this piece. OrHi.

The Exiles Return. | [By W H. Wead.] | . . . | [Eugene: State Republican Office? 1863?] [691b]

Broadside. 10 x 20.5 cm. Printed on ruled tablet paper. Line 2 printed in brackets; no period after W [sic].

Fifteen lines of verse. Comparison of type and paper with no. 677*f*, above, suggests that no. 691*b* was printed in the State Republican Office early in 1863. The paper is from the same or an identical tablet and differs decisively from the ruled paper used for no. 766*a*, below. The recorded copy, along with clippings of newspaper verse, is in an album of Mary Jane Hazeltine, Eugene, following pages of holograph copies of songs and poems. Handwritten and printed dates range from Feb. 12, 1860, to May 7, 1867, the latter date in a clipping reporting the death of Mary Jane, first wife of T. G. Hendricks, prominent citizen of Eugene.

Gross misspellings (vission for vision, weile for while, seans for scenes, etc.) suggest, not typographical errors, but that the printer followed bad copy or, perhaps, a deliberate attempt at phonetic spelling—one of a number of panaceas for social ills that were popular among the intelligentsia in the mid-nineteenth century. No record has been found of W. H. Wead as a resident of Oregon. But a W. H. Wead lived in California in 1872; see Louis J. Rasmussen, Railway Passenger Lists of Overland Trains to San Francisco and the West (Colma, Calif., 1968), II, 149.

The recorded copy of no. 704b is signed by George as editor. He is casually mentioned as editor in Oregon Historical Quarterly, XLIII (1942), 184, in a description of a copy of the first issue (Mar. 12, 1864) now entombed in the cornerstone of the Linn County courthouse; but his name does not appear as editor in this or later issues. Headrick was also in character on May 16, 1865, when he wrote Governor Gibbs (letter in OrU): 'I am Sheriff of Marion Co, Ogn, and as such am keeper of the common jail. I have in my custody Geo. P. Beale and George Baker who are under sentence of death [see no. 757]... I propose to keep these men securely and to be myself the judge of what shall be the course pursued to effect that care ... Of the copies now located, those in Or and WaU are physically separate and show no sign of having been removed from no. 857, which is hardbound; the copy in OrP, in a hardbound set of Secretary of State reports, seems to have suffered only this one bit of tampering. Stab-hole evidence is sometimes useful in distinguishing separated parts of side-stitched mid-nineteenth-century pamphlets from separate issues when they turn up in later hardbound assemblages. But this evidence is not available where an original hardbound assembly may have been broken up and parts reassembled and again hardbound. However, this kind of tampering is usually not done with sufficient care to conceal paper tears and crumpling in the disbinding process; the OrP copy shows no such evidence.

Form. 19.3 x 7 cm. Thick-thin rule border.

The first issue of the weekly Capital Chronicle, published by J. H. Upton and Anthony Noltner, appeared on Aug. 31, 1867. No. 997a was printed before Oct. 12, when Upton became sole proprietor of the paper. On the located copy of the form, Noltner's name is scratched out in its two appearances. Turnbull's account of the Chronicle (p. 141) is badly flawed: the name of the paper was not Capital City Chronicle; the first issue was not published on Oct. 21; Noltner did not remain a partner until November, when the Daily Chronicle was established (on Nov. 19); and the weekly was not succeeded by the daily in November, but continued to appear at least until Mar. 1868 (information from a broken file of the weekly in CU-B). CORBETT, HENRY W.

Supplement to Oregon Sentinel. |Remarks | of |Hon. Henry W. Corbett, | of Oregon, | in the Senate of the United States, December 13, 1867, | on his proposition to substitute Senate Bill No. 154 . . . | . . . | in place of Senate Bill No. 148 . . . | [1868?] 8 p. 14×22 cm. Printed in 2 columns. Caption title. On pp. 7–8 under a second caption title: 'Remarks on a Resolution offered by him December 6, 1867...'

Printed in Washington, D.C., from the same type as in the Congressional Globe, 40th Cong., 2nd Sess., pt. I, pp. 169–171, 63. There was another pamphlet issue, also from the Globe type and with pagination identical with no. 1070a, but with the following distinguishing characteristics: in place of line 1 of the supplement caption title, subject heading "The Currency'; colophon on p. 8: 'Printed at the Congressional Globe Office' (copies in DLC, MH, NHi, OrU). An item in the Sentinel, Feb. 8, 1868, states that no. 1070a was distributed with that issue. The Roseburg Ensign, Feb. 15, assumed that it was printed in Oregon, though the Sentinel made no such claim: "The Sentinel has printed Senator Corbett's remarks on National Finance of Dec. 6 and 13, in neat pamphlet form.'

Three other 1868 pamphlet supplements to Oregon newspapers were also printed in Washington from Globe type (these pamphlets have title pages): no. 1073, supplement to Sentinel (Globe, 40th Cong., 2nd Sess., pt. III, pp. 2442-2445); no. 1083, supplement to Oregon State Journal (ibid., pt. V, Appendix, pp. 225–227); no. 1252, supplement to Sentinel (ibid., pt. I, pp. 953–959). As in the case of no. 1070*a*, there was another issue of each of these pamphlets without a supplement label and with a subject title in place of the label. In place of Oregon title-page imprints, these issues have—Washington, D.C.: F. & J. Rives & Geo. A. Bailey, Reporters and Printers of the Debates of Congress. Location of copies of Rives & Bailey issues: no. 1073, MB, Wa; no. 1083, DLC, ICN, OrHi; no. 1252, DLC, OrU. Both issues of all four pamphlets are integral productions, without cancels.

Considering 1868 means of transcontinental communication and transport, it might seem that arrangements for supplement printing in Washington would have presented a difficult problem. But there was in fact no problem. B. F. Dowell, publisher of the Sentinel, and H. R. Kincaid, publisher of the Journal, were both in Washington at the time, Dowell lobbying for the settlement of Indian war claims, Kincaid serving as a clerk in the U. S. Senate. They were close friends and roomed together in the national capital. They doubtless made the arrangements in person and had the pamphlets shipped to Oregon, probably under a Congressional frank. It was removed, badly damaged by water seepage, in the spring of 1971. The cornerstone had been laid by the anti-liquor Good Templars, who may have been less skilled in practical masonry than the Freemasons, who usually laid cornerstones.

Inserted loose, following the title leaf, is a single leaf printed on both sides, with the caption title: Amendments to G. L. Constitution, | Adopted by Fifth Session G. L.— 1869. The amendments were also printed, from a different setting of type, in the 1869 droccedings (no. 1282).

OREGON CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Answer to Remonstrance | against extending the time for filing assent to the act granting | lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph | line from Portland, Oregon, to the Central Pacific Railroad, in California. | [Salem: American Unionist Office? 1869.] [1298c]

6 p. 14.3 x 22.2 cm. Caption title.

The closing events in the struggle between the two Oregon Central Railroad companies (see no. 698) for a federal land grant turned on the question of the dates on which the companies had been incorporated with power to file assent to an offer of the grant. There was legal uncertainty whether the West Side Co. was in fact incorporated at all. And the East Side Co. had been named recipient of the grant by the Oregon Legislative Assembly late in 1868, after the deadline for filing assent had passed. As the 40th Congress approached adjournment, Oregon Senator George H. Williams introduced S.B. No. 776 to extend the filing date to Apr. 1870, which would in effect confirm the claim of the East Side Co. The bill was vigorously opposed by the other Oregon Senator, Henry W. Corbett. In Jan. 1869 S. G. Reed, West Side lobbyist, published in Washington, D.C., a 4-page Remonstrance to the bill (see letter, Reed to John C. Ainsworth, Jan. 27, in OrU). The East Side Co. replied with no. 1298c. Typographical evidence suggests that the Answer was printed in the Unionist Office in Salem, where the headquarters of the company were located. It carries the names of eighteen directors who presumably gave their approval in Oregon, and makes a special point of the fact that the Remonstrance was signed only by Reed.

Williams's bill received the approval of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, but, after debate on the floor, was referred back to the committee, where it remained through to adjournment. When the 41st Congress convened in March, Williams again introduced his measure as S.B. No. 94, which was again approved by the Committee on Public Lands. And, in response to the committee report, Reed again protested with a pamphlet, Objections to the Passage of Senate Bill No. 94, which has the imprint of M'Gill & Witherow, Washington, D.C. This time Williams and the East Side Co. prevailed; the measure was enacted on Apr. 10.

Shortly after its enactment, the East Side Co. had a 24-page pamphlet printed in Washington with the M'Gill & Witherow imprint, entitled Oregon: A Brief History of the Resources of the Willamette, Umpqua and Rogue River Valleys . . . The purpose was the promotion of eastern investments in the development of the state, and in East Side bonds; but 9 pages provide a review of state and Federal legislation concerning the north-south line, including S.B. No. 94. Publication of the pamphlet was reported in the May 29 Roseburg Ensign.

The recorded copy of the Answer was given to MH by Sen. Charles Sumner on Aug. 20, 1869 (handwritten note on p. [1]). OrP and OrU have copies of the Remonstrance and the Objections, CU-B and OrP copies of Oregon.

There are three versions of this piece, differing in wording, type faces, cuts, borders, decorations, use of leaders, and ink colors: (1) Text transcribed above; printed with black ink over yellow screened background (OrU). (2) Same text; different type faces throughout; 2 lines of leaders and no leaders in 2 following lines; cut of female figure riding running deer; fanfare of decorative curved lines surrounding lines 1–2; printed with green ink over orange screened background (OrU). (3) Line 2, 'Certificate of Honor.'; lacks 'Teacher . . . Dept.'; date line, 'Oregon City, [leaders] 1869.'; cut of deer chased by dogs; printed in blue and red, no screened background (OrHi).

The cut of a deer chased by dogs, on (1) and (3), though it contributes to a formally rather pleasing design, is a startling example of the use of inappropriate stock materials. One might assume that this was finally noted and led to the printing of (2). But the inappropriate cut reappears on an 1870 seminary certificate printed in Portland by A. G. Walling (see no. 1438*a*, below).

When Thomas Lamb Eliot arrived in Portland in Dec. 1867 to become the first pastor of the Unitarian Church, the Unitarian Society had already built a chapel on a lot then on the outskirts of the city. Eliot was, however, determined to extend his ministry to the 'unchurched' and needed a more convenient place of meeting to make his presence known. In Jan. 1869 he rented the Oro Fino Theatre, on First Street between Oak and Stark in the center of the city, for six Sunday evening services. The innovation was a great success. Programs were printed for each service, with identical format and typography. The series was repeated in 1870 (see no. 1457c, below). Although there were printing facilities in Vancouver, W.T. The located copy of no. 1495*d* was preserved in a Himes scrapbook, a provenance that strengthens the probability, though it is not in itself conclusive evidence, that the piece is a Himes or even an Oregon imprint (see p. 181, above).

Baptists. Oregon. Siloam Association. Minutes of organization meeting. 1849. In Oregon Imprints, no. 56, it was suggested that the minutes of the Oct. 1849 organization meeting and the June 1850 first annual meeting were perhaps not printed. However, Signs of the Times, national Primitive Baptist periodical, acknowledged receipt of a copy of the 1849 minutes from John Stipp on Oct. 1, 1850, and reprinted from these minutes the constitution, articles of faith, and rules of decorum of the association. And in the next issue, Oct. 15, it published an accompanying letter from Stipp dated July 12, 1850, commenting at length on both meetings, with special attention to second thoughts of 'some of the brethren' concerning the articles of faith 'after the minutes [of the 1849 meeting] were printed.' This led to complications at the 1850 meeting and to a decision not to print certain material with the minutes of this meeting. The 1850 minutes had apparently not yet been printed when Stipp wrote his letter; but it is clear that they had been ordered printed, with deletions. See also no. L995b, below. We can now be fairly certain that the orthodox Stipp association printed minutes of all meetings from 1849 through 1870. [L13b]

- Oregon (territory). Laws, statutes, etc. School law. 1850. The law was published in the Oregon Spectator on Jan. 10, 1850, with the announcement: '... we will strike off a few extra copies of the law for general distribution.' Spectator, Feb. 7: 'We have a supply of the School Law in Pamphlet form, which we would be glad to distribute over the Territory.' [L28a]

Democratic Party. Oregon. Samuel R. Thurston poster. 1851. Oregonian, Apr. 26, 1851: 'Will some one inform the public where the posters, appointing Thurston meetings throughout the Territory were printed? and by whose direction[?]' Thurston had died on shipboard on Apr. 9, while on his way home to run for reelection as territorial delegate to Congress, but the news had not yet reached Oregon. The Oregonian's question was rhetorical; Asahel Bush undoubtedly directed the printing in the Statesman Office, Oregon City. The first issue of the Oregon Statesman, established to support Thurston's political interests, had appeared on Mar. 28. [L36b]

Anonymous. Handbill accusing Dr. I. A. Davenport of mistreating an Indian. 1852.
Oregonian, Feb. 28, 1852: 'The handbill (circulated without the name of the author or printer,) intended to injure Dr. Davenport, is disgraceful, and the act cowardly to the last degree.' In the same issue, an official notice by J. L. Parrish, Indian subagent, stated that he had examined the Indian and found the charge false. Dr. Davenport was 'dissipated but a good doctor' (O. Larsell, The Doctor in Oregon [Portland, 1947], p. 166, quoting George H. Himes).

Franklin Book Store Catalogue. 1853. Ad on inside front wrapper of 1853 edition of Blanchet's Chinook Jargon Dictionary (no. 76): Preserve this Catalogue! [rule] | Alphabetical Catalogue of Books, Paper, and Stationery, | constantly for sale at the | Franklin Book Store, | Front St. Portland, Oregon. | S. J. M'Cormick, Proprietor. | . . . | 1853. Wavy rule border. The ad was apparently printed from the type of the title page of the catalogue. Facsim. of complete no. 76 in Paul Kane, The Columbia Wanderer (Portland, 1971), following p. 54.

- Democratic Standard, Portland, Oregon. Extra. July 14?, 1854. Oregonian, July 15, 1854: 'That Democratic Standard "Extra" was a gigantic enterprise truly. It exhibited cute down east ingenuity to get out a two by three inch extra thing.' The first issue of the Standard had appeared on July 13, as the Oregonian reported in the same issue (Turnbull's July 19 is an error). The miniature extra may have reported briefly news that reached Portland on the steamer Peytonia on July 14. The smallest previously recorded Oregon newspaper extra is no. 485, approximately $3^3/_8 \times 4^1/_2$ inches.
- Democratic Standard, Portland, Oregon. Extra. 1854. Oregonian, Sept. 2, 1854: 'That 'Extra Standard'' was a great affair truly. The index of the man was clearly revealed by its $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches by $6\frac{1}{2}$.' See no. L95*a*, above. [L95*c*]

- Franklin Book Store Catalogue. 1855. Ad in Oregonian, Sept. 28, 1855: 'Catalogues of sixteen pages can be had upon application.' The 1855 catalogue was also published in a 16-page appendage (two 8-page gatherings) to the 1856 Oregon Almanac (no. 138) and to some copies of a second edition of the 1857 Almanac (no. 258). The Almanac gatherings are almost certainly from the same printing as the lost separate. The separate was described by McMurtrie (no. 81) from copies with the Almanac, but omitted from Belknap in the absence of evidence of separate issue. See also no. L229a, below.
- Oregon (territory). Legislative Assembly. Council. Rules, 7th Session. 1855. Asahel Bush to Elisha Whittlesey, First Comptroller of the U.S. Treasury, Feb. 23, 1856 (in DNA): 'You will find duplicates of a few bills, and the rules of the two houses. The first order was burned with the capitol (as is stated on the reprint) and the work was ordered reprinted. The type was actually set a second time in every instance.' The territorial capitol burned on the night of Dec. 30, 1855 (Bancroft, II, 352). This entry is perhaps sufficient to cover also the lost 1856 reprint. It should be noted that there was also an 1856 reprint of the lost 1855 House rules (Oregon Imprints, no. L212a).

Franklin Book Store Catalogue. Jan. 1857. Oregon Argus, Dec. 6, 1856: 'We have received a catalogue of new choice books, which have just arrived at McCormick's Book Store in Portland.' The status of this lost imprint is the same as no. L142b, above. The catalogue was also published in two 8-page gatherings appended to the first edition of the 1857 Oregon Almanac (no. 224) and to some copies of the second edition (no. 258). It was described by McMurtrie from copies with the Almanacs (no. 125). McMurtrie also described a 12-page 1858 calatogue (no. 147) on the basis of its appearance with the 1858 Almanac (Belknap, no. 259). But no evidence of separate issue has been found; and negative evidence, too complex for publication here, suggests that McMurtrie in this case recorded a ghost. [L229a]

The text of the address was reprinted in the Jan. 10, 1863, Argus; it rivals no. L610b, above, in dullness. [L653a]

Sons of Temperance. Oregon. Grand Division. Proceedings, seventh and eighth annual sessions, Salem, Oct. 9, 1862, and Oct. 2, 1863. Gazette, Sept. 28, 1867. Reliable printing evidence from newspapers is normally contemporary. In this case, however, the Gazette editor saw the printed 1862–63 proceedings in 1867 and used them for an article on the earlier history of the temperance movement in Oregon before the Good Templars assumed a commanding role in 1866. The reference may be to separate 1862 and 1863 pamphlets; but the article seems to suggest a single pamphlet. No evidence has been found of the printing of proceedings of other sessions. [L688a]

Good Templars. Oregon and Washington. Grand Lodge. Proceedings of second annual session, Sept. 4–7, 1866. Gazette, Nov. 10, 1866: 'They were printed in the Unionist office, Salem, for us.' This evidence requires abandonment of a conclusion that a May 1866 meeting, following an initial organization meeting in Oct. 1865, was counted as the second session of the Grand Lodge (see nos. 821, 1012). Record of the sixteenth annual meeting of the orthodox Stipp association, held with Providence Church, Clackamas County, June 21–23. American Unionist, July 15, 1867: 'The minutes are printed in a neat little pamphlet....' The Unionist mentions the meeting serial number and the name of John Stipp, which distinguish this pamphlet from the lost 1867 minutes of the Gregg faction. See Papers of the Bibliographical Society of America, LXIV (1970), 231–232.
- Congregational Churches. Oregon. Oregon City. Manual of First Congregational Church, Oregon City. American Unionist, July 29, 1867: 'three hundred copies . . . were recently printed.... It is neatly printed and bound in a pamphlet of nine pages.' [L999a]
- Freemasons. Oregon and Washington. Knights Templar Constitution. 1867. Gazette, Dec. 21, 1867: 'We are indebted to James A Waters, Grand Secretary, for two copies of the constitution, by-laws and rules of order of the Order of Knight Templars of Oregon and Washington Territory, for the Grand and Subordinate Councils. It is a neat pamphlet of 32 pp., printed by W D Carter, Portland. Constitutions, per dozen, $1 50. All orders and communications should be addressed to Jumes [sic] Waters, G S, Portland, Oregon.' The item involves a multiplicity of mysteries: (1) The rather full records of Masonry in Oregon in the 1860s do not include the name of James A. Waters. (2) Though the Gazette believed that Waters could be reached general delivery, Portland, his name does not appear in the Portland City Directory until 1872, where he is identified as deputy county clerk of Multnomah County; the only other reference in OrHi's files on early Oregonians is to a vital-statistics note on his marriage in the Oregonian, Aug. 8, 1872. (3) Masonic Knights Templar organizations, at the regional and local level, were designated commanderies, not councils, and the title of the office Waters claimed to hold was grand recorder, not grand secretary. (4) The name of the Masonic order was Knights Templar, not Knight Templars. (5) The Grand Master of the national Grand Encampment had issued an emergency dispensation in 1860 to authorize members in Oregon to organize a local commandery and a regular charter for Oregon Commandery No. 1, Oregon City, was received in 1863; but the commandery did not prosper and surrendered its charter in 1872. (6) The Oregon Grand Commandery dates officially from 1887, by which time there were three local commanderies in Oregon-in Portland, Albany, and Eugene. The evidence suggests that what Waters was trying to organize was not a Masonic order but something analogous to the Good Templars, for which the publisher of the Gazette was official printer. The address, which was reprinted in the Democrat, Jan. 4, 1868, probably from the same type, is poor doggerel perhaps borrowed from exchanges, with no substantial reference to Oregon and only a line or two asserting Democratic Party dogmas. The format suggests that the separate printing was done in the Journal Office from the same type. Payment of $85 to Vancleve is reported in the Dec. 16 Democrat. A NOTE CONCERNING THE MASSACHUSETTS-BAY COLONY SEAL

In 1935, Matt B. Jones published an article entitled 'The Early Massachusetts-Bay Colony Seals' (Proceedings of the American Antiquarian Society, 44: 13-44); it has stood ever since as the definitive study of the subject.

Most of the article was devoted to a study of the cuts of the seal frequently used by early Massachusetts printers at the head of official publications: one bearing the likeness of a female Indian (fig. 1) which was used by Samuel Green at the Cambridge Press, the other, displaying a male Indian (fig. 2), used by John Foster and his successors at the Boston Press.

In the course of his study, Jones examined more than a hundred copies of sixty impressions of the seals and noted that the imperfections found in any one impression of either cut were also present in all other impressions. He concluded,
